Rivers of the North

The first page is about rivers. A river gathers the rain of a whole valley and carries it to the sea, and every village along it takes its name from the water.

In spring the ice breaks with a sound like distant thunder, and the ferrymen wait three days before they trust the current again.

Mountains of the South

The second page is about mountains. A mountain keeps its own weather: the pass may be closed by snow while the orchards below are in flower.

Shepherds count the summer by the height of the pasture, and come down when the first frost whitens the upper huts.

海边的城市

第三页讲的是海。潮水每天两次漫过石阶，渔船在黎明前出港。

灯塔的光每十秒转一圈。
